LABRADOR RETRIEVER CLUB OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Retriever Review

DECEMBER 2009

WWW.LRCSOCAL.ORG

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE Hi Everyone,

Mark your calendars for January 16, which is they date we have tentatively set for an informal conformation practice match with some new twists, an obedience show-and-go, and a lunch. Final details will be in the next Review and possibly sooner.

Here is a partial preview of our 2010 Specialties and judges panel. Both Specialties have been approved. I can tell you that, as always, our Obedience Trial will be limited to Labradors, and our Futurity will be held in conjunction with the Saturday Specialty (in addition to Sweepstakes). For this upcoming Specialty we will go back to our original conformation format of having a single judge each day for both dogs and bitches. So far I have received the AKC approval for only the Saturday judging panel, which is:

Mrs. Majvor Nasman (Alvgardens) all regular and non-regular conformation classes

Mrs. Diane Pilbin (Chucklebrook) all junior showmanship classes Ms Bernadette Brown (Kings Ransom) all Sweepstakes classes and Maturity

Mrs. Janet Schoonover (CharDon) all Futurity classes Mrs. Pamela Murphy all obedience classes We are waiting on approvals for Rally (both days) and the Friday panels, but you can probably guess who they are.

Also, again, we have not been able to convince Lake Mathews KC to select a Sunday Labrador judge that we feel enhances the attractiveness of a three-day package, and consequently we will not be supporting the LMKC Sunday Labrador classes following our Specialty.

As I watch the flooding in the English Lake District, I am reminded to tell you about our plans to gradually develop a communications network that would assist club members with locating temporary shelter for their dogs in the event of a disaster that requires evacuation, or, heaven forbid, loss of their homes. At this time of year, disaster usually translates to wildfires, but in Southern California earthquakes, slides and floods are always a possibility. If you are interested in participating in this undertaking and can house one dog or more, can pickup and deliver, or are reliably reachable by phone or email on short notice, we need people in all areas where club members live. Please contact myself, Valerie Donahue, Celeste Young, Marty Rice, or Trudy Soneson for more information or to volunteer.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

The holiday's are upon us but it feels like summer! I'm not complaining - it gives me more of an opportunity to be outdoors with my trusty companions. We're still training hard for Open... Perhaps someday we'll be ready for a trial! LOL!

Reflecting upon the events & happenings of this year, this holiday season I am very thankful for what I have and what I have accomplished. Even though we didn't obtain a title, I am proud of my dogs and the bond that we have strengthened between us.

I hope that I have been able to bring you the information you want as well as a bit of fun in YOUR newsletter, this year. All of your ideas, articles, photos, brags, & pupulations that you send in are greatly appreciated.

I wish you all a VERY Merry Christmas and a spectacular 2010! God Bless you and your families - bi & quadru-peds, alike! -- Celeste Page 5 of 14 Retriever Review

LRCSC Fall 2009 Hunt Test Recap

The LRCSC had the fall hunt test on October 24-25 and it was another great event. The one small problem was that the test fell on the opening day of duck season, so there were a few disgruntled hunters that had to choose between the two. One handler told me on Sunday, that he should have come to the test on Saturday, as he would have had more live flyers at the test then he saw on Saturday at the Salton Sea! This conflict does not happen very often. The LRCSC is locked into the dates for years, and the Dept of Fish and Game, changes the dates each year. Hopefully, it will be a long time before this happens again, as Wendy and I were pretty tired of hearing about it by the end of the weekend.

That aside now, the entries were a bit lower in Master than usual, but Senior and Junior had good entries. Total entries were 132 dogs, broken down to 25 Master entries, 31 Senior entries, and 79 Junior entries.

The judges for Master were Cynthia Trotter and Bernadette Brown, from South Carolina. For those of you who did not have a chance to meet her, she will be back in the Spring to judge Sweepstakes at the 2010 Specialty. JR/SR judges were Ed and Candy Ferner and Kate Urquidi and our club member Linda Brooks.

Susie Terpstra put on a huge raffle and in addition to all the great prizes, member Steve Stevens donated a day of hunting at his duck club in Niland. This was a special raffle and each person paid $10 for a playing card. This was torn in half and then a random card was drawn. The winner was our young helper Wyatt, who is trying to earn and save money to buy his own shotgun! Dinner was served and all had a fun time.

CONGRATS TO EVERYONE!

The next hunt test is in April 2010 and I hope to see a few new faces.

I would like to thank everyone who helped with the event as it takes many hands to put on a test. Wendy Pennington donates her time and effort as HT chairman year after year, and brings so much knowledge and experience to the event. Margaret Stanard faithfully volunteers every test to bring the lunches and make sure all the test stakes have coolers full of beverages for the judges and helpers. There were new members that also came out to help and volunteer their time also. We had many gunners that spent their entire day in the field shooting. These events take people to put them on as do our Specialty. We always need more people and thanks again to those who help each time.

See you in the spring.

Working Certificate Recap - Fall 2009

We had a great turnout for the Fall Working Certificate test! Thank you to all of our entrants and to our volunteers who helped to make the event possible. A special thanks to Kurt Kemper, gunner extraordinaire! Thank you also to our volunteers who worked the popper/thrower stations, all of whom were running their pups in the test.

It was a beautiful day, and our esteemed judges, Eric and Trudy Soneson, put together a great test for our young and/or inexperienced dogs. We had 13 WC entries and 2 CAWA entries for the day. It was fun watching the dogs, many of whom had never been in the field or seen a bird just a few short weeks ago, do what comes naturally to them. Even more fun was seeing the faces of the proud and surprised owners as they watched their precious pups "bring their birds home for dinner".

TURKEY TALK

Courtesy of http://dogtime.com/safe-thanksgiving-with-dog.html

Thanksgiving is not just for people. Some of the bounty filling your plate this holiday is good for your dog too, says a growing contingent of nutrition-oriented veterinarians. Turkey, green beans, pumpkin, carrots--it's all protein and fiber your dog thrives on.

"Dogs' nutritional needs are fairly similar to people's," says Jean Hofve, a recently retired holistic vet from Denver. "If you're eating well-balanced, healthy, unprocessed food, your dog's plate should look a lot like yours."

People have been feeding table scraps to dogs since the first canine began hanging around the village campfire. But sharing food with your dog hasn't been as popular since--until a recent recall of more than 60 million cans of pet food.

The incident prompted many people to rethink their dog's diet and look for sources they could trust. In the weeks following the recall a dog food cookbook made Amazon's top 10 bestseller list for the first time ever, and one pet recipe website, BalanceIt.com, estimates their sales quadrupled.

"People want better, fresher food for their pets, and they're making it themselves," says Grant Nixon, a British Columbia veterinarian and co-author of Better Food for Dogs, who estimates that five to ten percent of his clients started cooking for their pets during the recall.

Not necessarily comfort food

Being able to trust what goes into your pet's food is appealing. But before you scrape your plate of food into your dog's bowl, consider this: a sudden switch from kibble to people food can make your dog very sick.

"Every Thanksgiving, we usually see five or six dogs come in with vomiting or diarrhea," says Grant Nixon. "If you ate nothing but bread and water and then someone gave you a steak, it'd upset your stomach, too." Nixon advises easing your dog into a home cooked regimen slowly.

A bigger challenge to regularly serving your dog home-cooked fare is making sure it includes the right nutritional balance. Buying commercial food is not only convenient, most brands are formulated to give your dog appropriate amounts of protein, fat, fiber, and other nutrients with each meal.

Worth the trouble?

Depending on who you ask, cooking for your dog either requires a degree in veterinary nutrition, or some healthy ingredients and a little common sense. Both Nixon and Hofve agree that, once you've figured out the right proportions and amounts, it's not rocket science. "It's kind of like cooking for another child," says Nixon.

Experts advise basing meals around meat, with the rest split between vegetables and whole grains. Your vet or a veterinary nutritionist can offer further guidance, especially since a dog's exact nutritional needs varies with age, size, breed, activity level, and special needs, such as allergies.

Is it worth the extra effort? For people uneasy about what goes into kibble and cans, the answer is yes. For others, a high-quality store brand with humangrade ingredients gives them peace of mind.

Or there's the middle-of-the-road solution: highquality dry food supplemented with a little meat, fish, vegetables, eggs, cheese, or whole grains from their own plates. And on Thanksgiving day, a nice slice of turkey. Page 8 of 14 Retriever Review

SPORTSMANSHIP

By Diana Kerew

"The sport of purebred dog competitive events dates prior to 1884, the year of AKC 's birth. Shared valises of those involved in the sport include principles of sportsmanship. They are practiced in all sectors of our sport: conformation, performance and companion. Many believe that these principles of sportsmanship are the prime reason why our sport has thrived for over one hundred years."

- Preface to the AKC Code of Sportsmanship.

This subject of good sportsmanship seems to be in the air, lately. Last year, at our annual UKC trials, the runs in Open A were nothing short of disastrous. Dog after dog failed in spectacularly awful fashion. For example, as the judge cheerfully informed me upon my return to the ring, Rennie held her sit-stay for 2 minutes, 59 seconds. Of course, it hardly mattered, because in her very first exercise, the honor, she sat up as I was returning to heel position, thus rendering her entire run a useless afterthought. "I NQ'd, didn't I?," I called to the judge as I pulled into place. "Yup," he said. Then we both laughed. Not one dog qualified that morning. But what stuck with me was the judge's speech at the end of the class, as he stood in the ring empty-handed. He thanked us all... for our good sportsmanship. At the Celeste Meade seminar, Meade described how the OTCH handlers in her neck of the woods (New England) try to help the Novice A people with warm-ups at shows. She said they recognize that it is their responsibility to help the newcomers out and encourage them to go on in the sport. You could hear a loud thump as, all over the room, jaws hit the floor in astonishment. At a recent show, AKC Field Representative Larry Warshaw was seen doing something truly unusual: He was handing out copies of the AKC Code of Sportsmanship to competitors. And we're not talking about beginners, here; he was targeting the most experienced handlers. Stories of cheating in the ring abound. Here are several acts of appalling misbehavior that I have witnessed recently with my own eyes. For the record, it's not okay to go to the show site the night before, work your dog in the Utility ring, and put food on the ring posts to use as a go-out target! It's not okay to watch your dog foul the ring, realize that a jump has obscured the judge's vision, and continue around the Rally course as if nothing has happened! And it's not just blatant cheating that mars our sport; there's also a disheartening lack of civility from some competitors. When did yelling at the judge because you didn't like your score become acceptable behavior? How about grousing (loudly) that the judge must be an idiot when he placed someone over you? What gives? Have we forgotten we are involved in a sport? That a sport is a game? Have too many of us been channeling our Inner Vince Lombard! ("Winning isn't everything; it's the only thing."), and forgotten that this is play? Part of learning to play a game, we are taught in school, is learning how to lose graciously; how to persevere and try to overcome obstacles; how to strive for our personal best, even when we aren't winning. Did we check all that at the door, when we entered the world of dog sports? AKC prints its Code of Sportsmanship in every rule book. It's every bit as important as what height at which to set the jumps, how to score the Moving Stand or the duties of the Steward during the Rally Honor Exercise. I have come to the conclusion that more of us should be reading it (apparently, so has Larry Warshaw), so I reproduce it here. Just note that its reference to "pure-bred dogs" will surely change, now that mixed breeds are being welcomed into competition. Therefore, for the purposes of this article, I have eliminated those words.

- Sportsmen respect the history, traditions and integrity of the sport of dogs.
- Sportsmen commit themselves to values of fairplay, honesty, courtesy and vigorous competition, as well as winning and losing with grace.
- Sportsmen refuse to compromise their commitment and obligation to the sport of dogs by injecting personal advantage or consideration into their decisions or behavior.
- The sportsman judge judges only on the merits of the dogs and considers no other factors.
- The sportsman judge or exhibitor accepts constructive criticism.
- The sportsman exhibitor declines to enter or exhibit under a judge where it might reasonably appear that the judge's placements could be based on something other than the merits of the dogs.
- The sportsman exhibitor refuses to compromise the impartiality of a judge.
- The sportsman respects the AKC bylaws, rules, regulations and policies governing the sport of dogs.
- Sportsmen find that vigorous competition and civility are not inconsistent and are able to appreciate the merit of their competition and the effort of competitors.
- Sportsmen welcome, encourage and support newcomers to the sport.

Where's The Beef? B.A.R.F. Feeding For Dogs

Pet Article courtesy of http://pet-articles.blogspot.com

Dogs are prey animals that existed in the wild as carnivores eating primarily raw meat and bones. Wild dogs rarely ate grain and that helped them to stay lean and mean. Dogs today are our beloved pets but they are still carnivores and many people believe that they should be fed the same diet that wild dogs once ate. Unfortunately, most commercial pet food is filled with grains and chemicals that experts say may account for the rising rate of skin allergies, gastrointestinal problems and cancer.

An alternative to chemical laden commercial foods that poisoned pets in 2007 is the B.A.R.F. (Biologically Appropriate Raw Food) Diet. The B.A.R.F. diet is controversial yet millions of people have switched to this way of feeding their dogs. Read on to discover some of the facts and controversies surrounding this popular method of feeding dogs.

What Is The B.A.R.F. Diet?

A Veterinary Surgeon in Australia, Dr Ian Billinghurst, created the B.A.R.F. diet and recommends that owners feed their dogs bones, fruits, vegetables, meat, eggs and dairy. His theory is that it is better to feed a dog completely raw food, imitating the types of food eaten by their wild ancestors.

What Food Can I Feed My Dog On The B.A.R.F. Diet?

There is much controversy in the B.A.R.F. community about what is included in the diet. Dr. Billinghurst states that vegetables and fruit are appropriate food to feed but others disagree. Most would agree that raw, meaty bones meat are a staple of the diet and that includes beef, chicken, deer, duck, game birds, goat, pork, lamb, fish, rabbit and veal. Some of the more controversial foods include eggs, vegetables, fruit, dairy, cooked cereals and supplements.

What About Handling Raw Food?

You should wash your hands before and after handling raw meat just (or wear disposable gloves) as you would while preparing food for humans. Be sure to disinfect cutting boards and countertops where meat is prepared. Many people believe that the dog digestive system is not as susceptible to salmonella, e-coli and parasites as humans. Many vets disagree.

How Much Food Is Fed Each Day?

On the B.A.R.F. diet dogs are fed according to their energy level. If your dog is very active it should be fed 2 to 3 % of their weight every day. A less active and more sedentary dog would get fed approximately 1% of their weight every day. This is not a precise measurement so it should be adjusted as your dog adapts to eating raw food. You should plan on feeding three or four times a day and preparing meals in advance.

What Are The Benefits Of Feeding Raw?

There is no scientific evidence that supports added benefits from feeding your dog raw food, but there have been many studies showing that commercial food is poisonous to our pets. People who are feeding their dogs raw food report that they save money and their dogs have less body odor, less bowel movements, cleaner teeth and reduced illnesses and medical costs.

Can Every Dog Eat Raw?

The simple answer is no. Most healthy dogs can adapt to raw food but dogs that are very old or that have chronic and serious illnesses may not be appropriate candidates for this type of diet. Some dogs will simply refuse to eat raw food. You should talk to vour vet before the switch but be prepared for the doctor to discourage you from making this decision. Some veterinarians are heavily influenced by commercial pet food companies because they make a great deal of money selling the product. Ask your vet if any patients feed their dogs raw food and ask if they experienced problems adjusting to the change in diet.

I am having trouble calculating the best time to breed my bitch. How should I properly calculate the best time to breed?

When your bitch comes into heat you will first notice a swollen, turgid vulva with a blood tinged discharge. This first stage of the estrous cycle is known as Proestrus. It usually lasts about 9 days (but it can vary). The point at which she enters the next stage of the estrous cycle is called Estrus, and it begins with a peak in Luteinizing Hormone (LH). This is known as "Day 0" and is the best way to calculate when to breed. However, because it is a very sudden and quick peak, it can be missed by a daily LH test. Therefore these are the recommended protocol of board certified reproductive specialists: Start doing daily LH tests about 3-5 days after Proestrus is first noticed. Because there is a chance you may miss the LH peak, it is important to indirectly monitor the LH peak by simutaniously doing a Progestrone test and vaginal cytology every other day. At the time that the LH peak occurs, the hormone Progesterone is expected to be about 2-3 ng/ml and will steadily increase. In addition, the changes from Proestrus to Estrus (the time of the LH peak) can also be monitored by noting the changes in cell types present on a vaginal swab. If the LH peak in directly caught on an LH test, then that date can be used as "Day 0." Otherwise, the combination of the Progestrone tests and vaginal cytology can be used to indirectly calculate the LH peak. Once you know "Day 0," you can expect ovulation to occur in 2 days (on "Day 2"), when Progesterone is about 4-10 ng/ml. However, because dogs ovulate immature ova, you must wait an additional 2 days for the ova to mature on "Day 4," when progesterone in 10-12+ ng/ml. Between "Day 4 and 6" are the most fertile time for your bitch. If you will only breed once, breed on "Day 5." If you will breed twice, breed on "Day 4 and 6." This will maximize your litter size. There is no need to breed more often. If you want to confirm that you did in fact catch the LH peak and thus breed at the correct time, you can continue doing vaginal cytology until you reach the next stage of the estrous cycle, Diestrus, which will occur on "Day 8." Although nothing can changed at this point, it will give you piece of mind that you did in fact breed at the most fertile days possible. If you find out you missed the LH peak, you can use this knowledge to better calculate the LH peak at the next estrous cycle.

My postpartum bitch has developed a very swollen mammary gland. I was told by my veterinarian it was mastitis and he sent her home on antibiotics. What should I know about mastitis? Will it affect the nursing puppies?

Mastitis is defined as inflammation of the mammary tissue. It is usually infectious in nature and primarily affects postpartum bitches. It can affect one or multiple mammary glands. In addition, it can spread from one gland to another. There are two forms that can occur. In the acute form, the bitch will show systemic signs of illness such as lethargy, fever and loss of appetite. In the chronic form, the bitch may show no signs of illness, but the puppies may show a failure to thrive. Because of this, mastitis can absolutely affect your puppies. With either form of mastitis (but particularly in acute mastitis), one or more of the mammary glands will be very swollen and warm to the touch. In extreme cases, the tissue will may die and become green, black and/or abscessed. It can become life threatening if not treated appropriately. Mastitis of either form requires veterinary attention. You will likely be sent home with antibiotics, anti-inflammatory/pain relieving drugs and be instructed to do frequent warm compresses.

The holidays are around the corner. Is there anything in particular I should do to keep my dogs safe?

Yes. The biggest concern around the holiday season for dogs is getting in to items they should not get into. These include food items such as chocolate, bones and all of the delicious, fatty leftover holiday dishes; as well as non-food items such as ornaments,

Sportsmanship (Cont'd from page 8)

- Sportsmen will deal fairly with all those who trade with them.
- Sportsmen are willing to share honest and open appraisals of both the strengths and weaknesses of their breeding stock.
- Sportsmen spurn any opportunity to take personal advantage of positions offered or bestowed upon them.
- Sportsmen always consider as paramount the welfare of their dog.
- Sportsmen refuse to embarrass the sport, the AKC or themselves when taking part in the sport.

Despite the slightly flowery language, these aren't difficult concepts to grasp. As "Sportsmen" (Sports people? Sports humans? Sports men and women?), we have an obligation to a tradition that goes back over 100 years. We are expected to:

- Value and practice fair play.
- Be honest and courteous.
- Behave graciously, win or lose.
- Behave ethically, without thought to personal advantage.
- Accept constructive criticism.
- If we don't like a judge, we don't complain or argue: We simply don't show under that person again.
- We don't try to influence the judge, beyond giving our best performance.
- We respect the rules.
- We recognize that competition and civil behavior are not mutually exclusive concepts.
- We welcome and encourage newcomers.
- We are fair and honest in our business dealings.
- We put our dogs' welfare above all else.
- We try not to embarrass ourselves, or our sport by our behavior.

It seems to me that these are pretty good values, and that we would actually enjoy the heck out of our sport if all of us put them into action. We would go to a trial or show confident that we were on a level playing field, that everyone was doing their best to be fair and play by the rules, that no one was going to insult us or attempt to throw us off our game, and that all present were there to enjoy the competition and accept the decisions of the judge on that day, without complaint or discord. Now, wouldn't that be fun? That's all for now. Have a good month, everyone.

ribbon, wrapping paper and holiday plants. Ingestion of these items may make you pet extremely sick and even result in death, so the most important thing you can do for your pet this holiday season is keep them away from these items. Non-food objects and bones can easily cause a foreign body obstruction which may require surgery. The primary signs to look for are vomiting and lethargy. Fatty foods can result in pancreatitis (inflammation of the pancreas) which is a very painful condition that also results in vomiting and lethargy. In addition, holiday plants like Poinsettias, Mistletoe, Holly, Amaryllis Bulbs, Christmas Trees and Christmas Tree water can be toxic or cause gastrointestinal irritation. Finally ingestion of chocolate can result in chocolate toxicity. More information on chocolate toxicity can be found the October issue of The Retriever Review. If you suspect any of these holiday complications in your pet, do not delay getting veterinary attention immediately.

Again, this is anecdotal information but many people report a detox stage in feeding raw food. This means the dog is adjusting to the diet and getting rid of toxins in their body. Symptoms your pet may display include vomiting, diarrhea, bad breath and itchy skin. Supplementing your pet with Vitamins C and E may help. If your dog has these symptoms for more than three days after switching diets, take them to your local vet. Ask your vet about the best method for changing your dog's diet.

Raw feeding is not for every dog nor will it work for every owner. Be careful whenever you change the diet of your pets. Some proponents of raw food insist that a "cold turkey" switch is better but most vets will disagree and say changes should be made gradually. Educate yourself by doing research and reading some of the great books available on raw feeding before making the switch.
